A learning disability is...

When you have difficulty understanding information.

When you may need help and support with some everyday tasks.

These difficulties will have started before the age of 18.

Learning disability is not:

- A mental illness
- Dyslexia or Dyspraxia
- ADHD
- Asperger's syndrome
- A physical or medical illness.

People with a learning disability can...

Volunteer or work.

Go to college or day centres.

Go to groups or activities.

Live a full and interesting life.

A person with a learning disability might find it difficult to:

Think about things.
Make decisions.
Understand or remember information.

Plan journeys.

Use money.

Tell the time.

Learn new things such as maths or reading.

There are lots of reasons why someone might have a learning disability:

A learning disability is sometimes called LD or an intellectual disability.

A learning disability is...

Not something to be embarrassed about.

Not caused by something you have done.

Not something people should be upset with you about.

You cannot stop someone from having a learning disability.

How it might feel to be told you have a learning disability:

You might feel happy to understand why you need help with some things.

You might feel angry or upset knowing that you might need support to do things.

You might feel confused. It might be a lot of information to think about.

Talking about how you feel might help.

What changes if you have a learning disability?

A photograph of four people (three men and one woman) standing together and talking. The man on the far left is wearing a white sweatshirt with a red graphic. The man next to him is wearing a grey hoodie. The man in the center is wearing a black hoodie. The woman on the far right is wearing a grey cardigan over a red patterned top.

You do not change.

A learning disability does not change who you are, what you like, or who you are friends with.

A spiral-bound notebook with the words "Support Plan" written on the cover. The cover also features a photograph of a young man and a young woman shaking hands.

You might be able to get support to:

- Look after yourself
- Go to groups or activities
- Go to a day centre or college

A learning disability is a disability under the Equalities Act (2010). This means:

Services need to make reasonable changes to help you. For example, longer appointment times.

You are entitled to a health check with your GP every year. This will help to keep you healthy.

You can use NHS learning disability services.

You should be given information in a way you understand.
